Murray Stops Evansville In Crucial Game

Hundreds Marooned, Many Dead in Worst Storm of Season

The big storm that hit the great plains states is moving eastward across the great lakes—losing strength rapidly.

But weather forecasters warn that the storm, while down, is definitely not out. They say it may still cause considerable havoc as it approaches the North Atlantic seaboard. Heavy snow is falling in a broad area across the North Central states today.

At the same time, forecasters warn the west coast that a new series of storms will roll off the Pacific Ocean and lash the seaboard beginning tomorrow.

The weatherman explains that the bad weather throughout the country is "all part of the general pattern resulting from the four storms that hit the west coast from the Pacific this week."

Getting back to the great plains storm, at least eight persons are dead, scores are missing and hundreds marooned in its wake.

Hundreds of rescue crews are working to free trains and buses stuck in snowbanks. Others are fighting through drifts to reach people trapped in cars, homes and schoolhouses by the raging blizzard.

Last night the lanterns, flashlights and torches of searchers cast an eerie glare in many places over the glowing white blanket. Candlelight flickered from farmhouse windows in what seemed like a Christmas preview.

Thousands of head of livestock were killed in the storm. And many communities from Minnesota southwest through Kansas are without power, light, or communications.

Kansas state patrolman Kenneth Nelson reports the children marooned since Thursday morning in a school bus near Oakley, Kansas, have made their way safely to a nearby farmhouse.

And 20 people were stranded on a Denver bus when it was hit by a blizzard from where it came. All are in good condition despite being stranded for 36 hours.

Literally, thousands of autos litter midwestern highways.

Communications companies report wire service throughout the area has been so snarled that it will take

Local Farmers To Vote On Tobacco Quota

Approximately 4500 persons in Calloway county are eligible to vote in the marketing quota referendum on fire-cured (or dark air-cured) tobacco to be held Saturday, November 27. Q. D. Wilson, Chairman of the County Agricultural Conservation Committee, reports.

The referendum was called in accordance with the law, which authorizes marketing quotas on fire-cured and dark air-cured tobacco for the 1949 crop. However, marketing quotas cannot be in effect unless approved by at least two-thirds of the growers voting in the referendum.

Marketing quotas, according to Mr. Wilson, have furnished growers with a method of adjusting supply to demand and can help to provide fair prices to growers for the tobacco they produce.

"Any person who has an interest in the 1949 crop of fire-cured or dark air-cured tobacco as an owner, tenant, or share cropper is entitled to vote in the referendum," however, no person is entitled to more than one vote even though he may be engaged in production of tobacco in two or more communities, counties, or states. Any person who in 1948 is engaged in production of both fire-cured and dark air-cured tobacco may vote in both referendums, he added.

Mr. Wilson explained that if marketing quotas are imposed, individual farm acreage allotments will be continued in 1949. Growers will be advised as to their 1949 farm acreage allotments prior to the referendum, he added.

Fire-cured and dark air-cured tobacco quotas are imposed on growers for loans, but loans will be available on the 1949 crop if quotas are approved.

Cow Eats Well

KELLY'S CORNERS, N. Y. (UP)—A stray Guernsey cow was pretty well fed up after a 6 a.m. to 4 p.m. visit in W. W. Briggs' garden. She polished off 50 heads of cabbage and several rows of beets before her owner arrived to settle with Briggs for damages.

Married 50 Years

Mr. and Mrs. Voris Andrus, 504 South 4th street, celebrated their Golden wedding anniversary November 16 with an informal dinner at the home of their son, South 12th street. Members of the family present were Coy Andrus of Mayfield, Stanford Andrus of Murray, and daughters, Mrs. N. E. Colson, Mrs. Jake Dunn and Mrs. J. D. Outland of Murray. A large number of friends also called. The happy couple received many gifts.

Under The Capitol Dome

One limb a day is enough climbing for Senator McGrath of Rhode Island, Chairman of the Democratic National Committee.

And so the senator wouldn't take any more fast ones after he boasted he'd be plugging for senator Lucas of Illinois to become Democratic floor leader when Barkley moves up to the vice-president's seat.

McGrath, as head of the Democratic national committee, isn't supposed to take sides in picking the majority leader. But McGrath, as senator from Rhode Island, has just the same right to choose as any other senator.

And McGrath used his prerogative to name his choice, knowing of course, the weight it would carry. It was then that he made the comment about one limb being enough for that day.

But immediately afterward McGrath climbed atop another limb way far out of his territory either as a senator or as a Democratic politician.

We're referring to his remarks about the house committee on Un-American activities.

McGrath told a big news conference at Capitol Hill that the house committee on Un-American activities faces "a rather dismal" future.

Not content with that, a moment later he went on to elaborate: "It has no future if it intends to act as it has in the past."

There was a buzz in the room. And that buzz now has extended to Capitol Hill. Everyone's saying: "Wait till John Wood and John Rankin hear that. They'll blow their tops when they come back to Washington."

Congressmen Wood of Georgia and Rankin of Mississippi are the top Democratic members of the house investigating un-American activities.

McGrath put his foot into it on two scores.

One, the un-American activities committee is purely a house baby. It has no similar group in the senate. And even if it did, the senate would have nothing to do with it.

Several senators have felt privately that the house committee was somewhat out of line in the way it conducted its investigations. But their public comments usually were reserved. For one thing, it's none of the senate's business. For another, criticism from a senator of a purely house business always stirs up more trouble than it would solve.

Each chamber is jealous of its own activities. There was a case not so long ago of a congressman telling a wandering senator to keep his nose where it belongs: the language wasn't even that polite.

On the second score, McGrath as a Democratic national committee man is stepping out of bounds in suggesting taming of a congressional committee.

It's something like a yankee intruding in southern elections.

Not that criticism of the un-American activities committee can't be found in the house itself. There's been plenty of it, but not enough to kill or clip the committee's wings.

The un-American activities committee has been a thorn in the side of the administration for years.

Organized under former congressman Dies of Texas, it caused continual new deal headaches.

After Dies left, the new deal leaders saw a chance to get rid of the committee entirely. It had only been on a year to year basis, anyway, as one of the special committees of the house. Without Dies, the leaders thought they had no trouble.

They were in for the shock of their lives. In some fast legislative maneuvering, Rankin not only got continuation of the committee, but continuation on a permanent basis. It became a permanent institution of the house in the reorganization law.

Rankin at that time probably would have taken over the chairmanship, except that it meant that he would have to give up the veterans committee which he prized more.

And so congressman Wood became chairman with Rankin the most active member until the Republicans took over congress.

The management changed, but the methods remained about the same. President Truman denounced the committee's communism investigation as a "Red Herring." The administration leaders were particularly sore that the committee waited until a special session on inflation to start its headline revelations.

Wood, who is slated to return as chairman, already is promising some changes. For instance, he is sure that Edward U. Condon head of the bureau of standards, who was described by the committee as the weakest link in the atomic security chain, will finally get his hearing.

But if the administration has any plans to starve or cut off the funds for the un-American activities committee, a real fight is in prospect.

ESCAPED LIFER BEING HELD FOR STATE OFFICERS

CANANDAIGUA, N. Y., Nov. 19 (UP)—An escaped convict who had been a model citizen for the past three years and recently married a woman who knew nothing of his past is being held in New York for extradition to Kentucky to serve out a life sentence.

Samuel Wilson Montgomery, 43, said last night when arrested that he wished he could drop dead.

Montgomery had a job as a shipping room foreman in Rochester and had been living under the name of Weldon Stadler. He was trapped by his fingerprints, taken after he pleaded guilty and received a suspended sentence for criminal negligence in a fatal automobile accident.

Before being taken in, he was given a chance to visit his wife in their basement apartment while police stood by.

He told her, "I guess you didn't know I was an escaped convict." His wife burst into tears. Officers led him away to jail.

Police say Montgomery escaped from Kentucky State prison at LaGrange three years ago while serving a life term for armed robbery and assault.

Montgomery explained that he was a trustee at the prison. About December 1, three years ago, he said the warden sent him to Louisville to pick up some cloth for a suit. He says he just didn't go back to the prison.

Montgomery says he's sorry about the whole thing now. He adds he was getting along well—going straight—and everything would have been all right if it hadn't been for that accident.

Hollis Johnson was welcomed as a new Rotarian. Those bringing guests were Dr. Hugh McElrath, Preston Ordway and Gerge Bell.

BARKLEY SAYS CIVIL RIGHTS TO BE PASSED

By United Press
Vice-President elect Alben W. Barkley has echoed Mr. Truman on the Civil Rights issue. And he went a step further.

Back in Washington after a brief visit at the Chief Executive's vacation spot in Florida, Barkley told newsmen that southern filibuster threats won't stop the next congress from passing in some form civil rights laws. What form, though, Barkley wouldn't say.

Nor would he discuss a compromise sought by some Dixie lawmakers. They have said, in effect: Lay off the fair employment bill and we'll not filibuster the poll tax or lynching bills.

However, Mr. Truman himself said only yesterday that he personally would see that Congress tackles all three matters.

In reply, southerners who revolted against the chief executive during his campaign on that very issue, promised to fight "to the finish."

Truth Set to Music
 Lesson for November 21, 1948

"THE opposite of poetry is not prose; it is science." There were poets in the world long before there were scientists, but that does not prove that poets are out of date. Many people in our modern world think we could not get along without science but could well burn all the books of poetry. If we did, it would be a dreadful mistake. Poet and scientist Dr. Foreman each has his truth to see and to speak. We need them both. Certainly if we tried to burn all the poems we should have to destroy some of the best-loved parts of the Bible.

Not All Poets Have Long Hair
 Some "practical" people sniff at poets for being peculiar. "Long hair" is a slang name for them as for other people who know something besides arithmetic. As a matter of fact, many poets are very practical people themselves; engineers, farmers and soldiers all have written poetry. The poets of the Bible are of many sorts. If you will look into an edition of the Bible in which the poetic sections are printed as poetry is printed in other books, you will be impressed by the very large proportion of poetry, especially in the Old Testament. The new Study Bible or the American Revised Version or Moffatt's translation will show this at a glance.

These Bible poems are of various kinds. Some are war songs (Judges 5), some are prayers (Psalms), some are love songs (Song of Songs), odes (Isaiah 40), prayers (Psalm 16), hymns for public worship (the Psalms).

The writers were never professional poets, so far as we know. Of the poems which are this week's lesson Scripture, two were written by housewives, one by a shepherd, one by a soldier, one by a preacher (Habakkuk), and only one (Lamentations) possibly by a professional poet. The original Hebrew book of Lamentations does not claim Jeremiah for its author, but if he was the writer, then it was written by the most practical man of his time.

World's Greatest Hymn Book
 "Let me write a nation's songs, and I care not who writes their laws," said a famous man. The same thing can be said about religion. "Let me write a church's hymnbook, and I care not who writes their theologies." The hymns our mothers loved, the hymns we heard before we heard any other kind of poetry, the hymns that have become a part of our minds—these mean far more to most people than all the printed creeds.

Now the Christian religion is a singing religion. Our very first hymnbook was the Book of Psalms, and all the hymns since, down to the present day, grew out of this one book in the Bible. It is the greatest hymnbook in the world; not the longest nor the oldest, but the greatest in its influence for good upon mankind.

Poetry Was in Jesus Blood
 OF OUR Lord Jesus himself, it truly can be said, poetry was in his veins. He came of a poetic family. His most famous ancestor, David, was a poet, another royal ancestor, Hezekiah, wrote poetry. The book he knew best, the Old Testament, was full of poetry. His own mother Mary, before he was born, sang a song of her own making, so beautiful that it is still sung in Christian churches and loved the world around.

When Jesus died on the cross, two of the last seven sentences that came from his lips were quotations from the Psalms. The poetry of his people was in his blood, for in his last agony the words that came from his breaking heart were words first spoken by the poets of the Bible long ago.

So it is always. Truth in song will tarry long. Today and always, the parts of the Bible which are most cherished, the parts most often learned by heart, the parts which we carry with us to the valley of the shadow of death, are the truths set to music, long centuries ago, by inspired men who knew how to clothe truth with garments of shaping and immortal loveliness.

Ricky's Thanksgiving

Ricky let out a war whoop as he raced down the path toward his brother and sister who were returning from school. Fred, in his ten-year-old glory and Beth, carrying an arm load of books topped the little hill that led to the lawn.

"Yip-yip-yip! Come on tomorrow's Thanksgiving-no school for you!" Called Ricky as he came near. "We can have our club, Beth," said Fred.

"Can I be in it, Fred, can I?" Asked Ricky eagerly.

"No, of course not. You're too young and besides you must do a daring deed before you can join," said Fred whose dreams of cowboys and Indians put many fantastic and impossible ideas in his head. "Come on Beth, I'll race you to the house."

The older children were away in a cloud of dust leaving the bewildered Ricky behind. Ricky brushed a yellow curl out of his big blue eyes and started slowly toward the house on his chubby five-year-old legs. "I'll show 'em," he declared. "I'll do the grandest thing 'He had heard mother use that word 'grandest' and thought it nice."

When he reached the house Fred and Beth were doing their lessons.

"Freddie, what brave deed may I do to join the club?" He asked.

"Go way Rick—3 times 4 equals."

"Freddie, what must I do to join the club?"

"9 times 8 equals 73. On Ricky, please be quiet."

"Oh, get an eagle feather!" Said Fred, to get rid of his brother. "10 times 10 equals."

"An eagle feather!" Thought Ricky. "How could I get that? Suddenly a loud squawk from the back yard caught his attention—the Thanksgiving turkey! Fred would never know the difference. He was dead serious now. The turkey feathers would really work!"

That afternoon when everybody was busy with the chores, Ricky tiptoed to the turkey coop and opened the door. The huge fat turkey promised a real dinner and Ricky smirked his lips at the thought, then reaching forward he grabbed the sleeping fowl by the tail feathers and the startled fowl made a lunge for the door, with a loud yelp. Ricky was too startled.

Penny Homemakers Meet At Home Of Mrs. Ollie Hale

Speaking at the Penny Homemakers club on Monday Nov. 15, Mrs. Preston Boyd, Major Project Leader presented the lesson on "Selection and Buying of Woolen Materials." According to Mrs. Boyd, terms to know for a better knowledge of wool fabrics are: Worsted, woolen, Napped, Yarned and piece dyed. Mrs. Virgil Gibbs assisted Mrs. Boyd with the lesson.

After the devotional period which was conducted by Mrs. Harmon Ross and Mrs. Chester Chambers, the club was occupied with the usual routine and miscellaneous business, among which was the change of secretary. Due to ill health Mrs. Harbard Jettison can't serve as secretary. Mrs. Larry Rutherford was elected to take her place.

Responding to the roll call 21 members told briefly how they spent Thanksgiving, when a child. The other reports taken; to which attention is here called were: The reading report of Mrs. J. E. Waldrop, and Citizenship report by Mrs. Larry Rutherford.

DESERT DESTINY

by JOSEPH CHADWICK

Tracy Hayden has always lived on the Arizona ranch owned by old Senora Maria Garrison. She's a favorite of the old lady, whose surviving son, Ramon, and whose grandchildren, Juan and Ruth, are a disappointment to her. When the Senora hears of an adventurous grandson, Phil Garrison, whom she has never seen, she sends Tracy to Baltimore to bring him West, hoping that he will take charge of the ranch. The other Garrisons disapprove, for they fear she may make him her heir. Meanwhile, in Baltimore, Phil is being hunted by Jim Conroy, a man he wronged while both were with the Flying Tickers in China. Tracy meets Jim, mistakes him for Phil, and brings him to the ranch. When she discovers he's an impostor, she's bitterly, especially as she was beginning to fall in love with him. However, she agrees he should continue the imposture for the Senora's sake. Ramon and Juan, still thinking he's her son, resent his presence. The ranch manager, Clint Hanlon, a suitor of Tracy's, is also hostile. One day, in the near-by town, Jim and Tracy run into Phil, who has come West without knowing Jim was there. The two men clash. Jim, sure that Phil will be afraid to come to the ranch while he's there, persuades Tracy that it's best to maintain the status quo for a while.

"Good! Now I want you to leave at once, and take a fast horse. Here is a dollar for you."

The boy showed gleaming white teeth. "Gracias, Senorita."

Tracy waited until he had caught and saddled a pony, then watched him ride away at alope.

SHE was about to return to the house when a footfall sounded behind her. Turning, she saw Clint Hanlon approaching. She knew a moment of uneasiness. Had Clint through his office window, seen her give the letter to the boy? Might he question the lad about it later?

He said, "If your message was urgent, Tracy, you could have sent someone in the station wagon."

"It wasn't urgent," she replied, hoping this did not sound false.

"Not urgent means to waste a man's time."

"I hear you drove to town today with Phil Garrison," he remarked.

"He went to the bank."

Clint looked away from her then. "What do you think of him?"

He seems a lot different from Ramon and Juan."

"I'm keeping an open mind about him. However, the Senora seems to have taken a great fancy to him, and that, of course, is the important thing," Tracy said.

Tracy gave Clint a searching look. "You don't like him, do you?"

"He answered, bluntly, "For obvious reasons. I don't like to see an outsider come here and meddle. I consider Ramon Garrison the head of the family." He paused.

"And then, there's you, Tracy."

"Why am I a reason for your disliking him?"

"Ramon has told me that the Senora thinks you should marry a Garrison. It's easy to guess that she has a great fancy for you."

When I saw him, I realized you might fall in love with him. I wasn't quite ready to ask you to marry me, Tracy, but when he came, I knew I couldn't wait."

Tracy bristled. "You're quite wrong, Clint, and I won't have you talk that way about the Senora. I won't listen to it!"

She swung about and walked back to the house.

As she entered the lower hall, she saw Dr. Jessup descending the stairs. She drew him into the living-room and asked him how the Senora was.

"Amazingly well, considering how ill she was. She seems stronger, each time I come. But—" He hesitated. "You want me to be honest, don't you?"

"Strictly honest," Tracy replied.

"Very well, I think it best that you know. Her heart isn't strong. Any extra exertion, any mental shock might be fatal. Or she may fall peacefully into the last sleep at any time."

"Oh, don't look so frightened, my dear. She will probably live with us for—well, for another six months."

When the doctor was gone, Tracy stood there in the center of the living-room, a frightened look in her eyes. Six months—that was not very long. But more frightening still, he wasn't sure it would be even that long. Tracy felt like crying.
